

Overview

Elisa Ravazzoli is a senior researcher at the Eurac Research Institute for Regional Development since 2012. She holds a PhD in Economics - Policy and Culture of the Territory from the University of Bologna and a MA in Geography and Territorial Processes from the same university. In the past years, she has been appointed contract professor at the University of Verona and at the University of Bergamo, where she taught undergraduate and graduate courses in Urban Geography, Economic Geography and GIS.

Her research focuses on different topics related to human, regional and spatial geography (e.g. population patterns; socio-spatial transformations; regional spatial disparities; urban-rural divide; public spaces) and she is interested in projects on local and rural development.
